09.30.10 - Class for Architects 2010

For 2 years Structures has hosted a class for architectural students at our office. Students from The University of Texas at Austin attending the class instructed by Charlton Lewis are given a tour of our office and shown what we do as structural engineers and how we work with architects through a project.

We feel that this early insight into the collaboration of architects and their structural consultants during the early stage of their architectural education allows for these up and coming architects to have a better understanding of the relationship that occurs between engineers and architects and in turn will lead to successful collaborations in the future.
